Simon Luisi is a self-employed courier and has been a Torontonion for over twenty years. He is running as a candidate in the Davenport riding, his residence since 2002.

Simon is an activist with a number of organizations working to protect wild spaces and animals. For many years, Simon has been a member of the Toronto Vegetarian Association and has been vegan since 2005.

Simon has worked with the Peaceful Parks Coalition to protect provincial and national parks, helping with petitions to stop cormorant culls and other campaigns. He also continues to participate in demonstrations against the fur fashion industry.

Simon is also a member of Fair Vote Canada, the multi-partisan citizens' campaign for voting system reform.

In August 2000, after Toronto City Council voted in favour of the Adams Mine plan as dump site for Toronto's garbage, Simon found himself adding his voice to the community opposition.

His activism has resulted in several published letters regarding animal and environmental issues.

Simon's knowledge about parliamentary procedure is from his position as Toastmaster International Program President of a Toastmaster Club, which he held for two years.

Simon is a graduate of General Sciences and an engineering student at Ecole La Polytechnique, in Montreal and speaks both of Canada's official languages.

Simon continues his involvement with AAEV in this election after running as AAEV's Davenport candidate in the 2008 General Election.
